If you have children and a landlord refuses to rent to you, requires a higher security deposit, limits the use of facilities, or says you can only live in certain areas of a housing complex... that could be discrimination. And housing discrimination is against the law.

Invaders

This relative of the kiwi fruit was introduced from horticultural cuttings in 1886. It forms dense mats of twining vines that invades forests, shrublands, and meadows.

The vines can overwhelm other plants, including trees. Trunks and branches can break under their weight, especially in ice and snow.

Asiatic sand sedge (Carex kobomugi) is native to coastal northeast Asia, first noted on the U.S. west coast in 1907, and on the east coast in 1929.

It was used to stabilize east coast sand dunes until the 1980s. It out-competes natives, but leaves dunes more vulnerable to erosion.

Policeman's helmet (Impatiens glandulifera) out-competes natives by creating dense thickets in riparian areas, moist forests, and wet meadows, and can lead to soil erosion.

It draws native pollinators away from nearby native plants and leads to overall reduction in biodiversity and decline in ecological value.

Chinese privet (Ligustrum sinense) is often found on the edges of swamps, riparian areas, and woodlands.

An ornamental introduction from southeast Asia in the 1850s, this shrub has naturalized and been spreading since the 1950s.

Water primrose (Ludwigia grandiflora ssp. hexapetala) is another species whose range is expanding north.

This rooted aquatic is native to South and Central America, and was first introduced into Tennessee and Kentucky in 1968 and 1988, respectively.

Water primrose grows by stolons, or runners, and can spread on land and water forming a floating mass that chokes out native vegetation.
