modified for tactical missions, with enhanced off-road capabilities and air transportability.

The bulldog mascot became associated with Mack Trucks during World War I, when Mack delivered over 6,000 trucks to the American and British militaries. British soldiers dubbed the Mack AC models "Bulldog Macks" for their toughness, and the name stuck.

In recent years, the Macungie plant has become a leader in environmental sustainability within the heavy-truck industry. Since 2009, the facility has reduced energy use and carbon dioxide emissions by around 50%. In 2013, Mack became the first U.S. manufacturer to earn the Superior Energy Performance Platinum Mature Energy Pathway certification.

Today, Mack LVO employs nearly 3,000 workers, supporting local jobs and boosting our regional economy. As your state legislator, I believe it's essential to visit facilities like this to explore how we can support businesses like Mack LVO and shape policies that drive economic growth across Pennsylvania.
