

On the Ground in Pennsylvania

By U.S. Senator Dave McCormick

On Friday, I spent the day in Lancaster County visiting two advanced manufacturing facilities that highlight Pennsylvania's leadership in innovation, skilled trades, and economic growth. I was able to bring my Dad with me throughout the day. We started in Lititz at Kenvue's manufacturing facility, a great example of Pennsylvania's life science history, where we toured operations and met with the skilled workers who produce trusted consumer health brands found in medicine cabinets across the country and around the world -- such as including Listerine®, Aveeno®, Neutrogena®, Lubriderm®, and Neosporin®.

During my visit to the 70-year-old plant, I saw firsthand how Kenvue is investing in America's advanced manufacturing by utilizing artificial intelligence (AI) in their production and data sourcing. I was also inspired by their Manufacturing Day initiatives that expose local high school students to rewarding careers in the skilled trades. It was impressive to see how this facility continues to innovate while supporting good-paying jobs for Pennsylvania families.

After a great tour of Kenvue, my team and I stopped at Dosie Dough in Lititz for delicious coffee and whoopie pies!

Then, we traveled to New Holland to tour Case New Holland's (CNH) agricultural equipment manufacturing facility, which has been producing machinery in Lancaster County for decades. We were able to meet with CNH's skilled workforce, many of whom are fourth-generation employees. This highlighted the company's deep roots in the community and its commitment to Pennsylvania's agricultural heritage and workforce. Having grown up baling hay and continuing to help maintain my family's farm, the visit was especially meaningful to me.

These visits in Lancaster County reinforced the importance of a strong domestic manufacturing base that creates great jobs, supports families, and keeps Pennsylvania competitive. With an incredible workforce, deep industrial heritage, and a culture of innovation, the Commonwealth is well positioned to continue leading America's manufacturing future.
