Keep Pennsylvania Beautiful With New Littering Law

By Michael Ortoski

HARRISBURG - On Wednesday, Senator Mario Scavello joined advocates and Gov. Tom Wolf for a ceremonial signing into law his legislation to reduce littering in Pennsylvania.

Senate Bill 431, now Act 62 of 2018, requires that for a first offense of scattering rubbish, a person is required to pick up litter or illegally dumped trash for between five and 30 hours within six months, in addition to the existing fine of $50 to $300. For a second or subsequent offense, the offender may also be required to pick up litter or illegally dumped trash for 30 to 100 hours over one year, in addition to the existing fine of $300 to $1,000.

Representatives of Keep Pennsylvania Beautiful and the Pocono Mountains Visitors Bureau were on hand to see the bill signed into law.

"When you look at all of the trash along our roads, it's clear that fines alone are not enough to deter this crime. Littering is like graffiti and other acts of vandalism – when people engage in it without fear of punishment, it sends the message that no one cares and leads to more litter. It's time to show we really care said Scavello."
