

Brain Injury Awareness Takes Center Stage

By State Rep. Ann Flood

Brain Injury Awareness Day at the Capitol brought together survivors, caregivers, advocates, health care professionals and lawmakers to raise awareness of the challenges faced by individuals living with brain injuries and the support they need throughout the recovery process. As co-chair of the Pennsylvania Brain Injury Caucus, I was honored to take part in this important annual event.

Throughout the day, we heard powerful stories of resilience and recovery while discussing the importance of rehabilitation services, community support and continued advocacy. I also shared my family's experience with my daughter, Lauren, whose life and legacy continue to inspire my commitment to supporting individuals and families affected by brain injury.

Brain injuries often create challenges that are invisible to others. By listening to survivors and their families and working alongside advocates and providers, we can continue building a Commonwealth where individuals living with brain injuries have access to the resources, understanding and support they need.
