Warren County Officials Use Helicopter for Aerial View of Areas of Concern

By Art Charlton

WARREN COUNTY NJ. - Warren County officials and the NJ State Police Office of Emergency Management toured the county by helicopter last week to get a bird's-eye view of some of the issues they are working to solve.

From the air, participants were able to evaluate several mediation issues including flooding from storms such as Hurricane Ida that impacted the Warren County Landfill and other locations and facilities. They also viewed the area road network with an eye toward several warehouse projects and the effect they are having and will have on traffic from trucks, other vehicles, and pedestrians.

Commissioner Director Jason J. Sarnoski said the tour offered a valuable look at the flood hazard mitigation efforts, truck traffic flow, and construction underway at the Warren County Landfill.

The 30-minute helicopter tour included Sarnoski, Commissioner James R. Kern III, county Administrator Alex J. Lazorisak, and Public Safety Director Frank Wheatley. The flight was a State Police operation requested on behalf of the Warren County Office of Emergency Management.

"Seeing Warren County from the air reminds me how beautiful our county is," Sarnoski said, but noted, "This operational exercise helped us get a better understanding of our capital programs, our needs, and how projects are benefitting the residents of Warren County."

"Being able to observe Warren County from above provided us with new perspective," Kern explained. "Aside from infrastructure and project observations, we also were able to discuss the county's hazard mitigation plan, he said. That plan is available on the Warren County Public Safety website at www.warrencountynjdps.com/emergency-management/mitigation/2021-hazard-mitigation-plan.

"Flooding continues to be a major hazard for Warren County. With our state and local partners, we have plans in place to keep our critical sites operational and residents safe," Kern remarked.

The air tour started and ended at the county Public Safety Building in Franklin Township, headed west to the Delaware River, the headed upriver to the I-80 Exit 4 interchange at Columbia and east to Exit 10 at Hope to view truck traffic on Routes 80, 46, 521 and 519. The flyover continued past the county landfill in White Township before returning to the Public Safety Building.
