First Pennsylvania Litter Plan Calls for Action Statewide

By DCNR

HARRISBURG - Governor Tom Wolf, PennDOT, and the Pennsylvania Department of Environmental Protection joined other administration and community stakeholders to highlight innovative local anti-littering measures and called for action to combat Pennsylvania's litter-problem at all levels statewide.

"If we bring the same energy to litter prevention initiatives that thousands of volunteers have brought to cleaning up litter in their communities, we'll turn a corner on Pennsylvania's trash problem," said DEP Secretary Patrick McDonnell.

The state's first-ever Litter Action Plan reflects the work of more than 100 stakeholders from state and local government, businesses, the legislature, and more -- and includes both current initiatives and recommendations to clean up the more than 500 million pieces of litter scattered throughout the commonwealth.
